Once upon a time, there was a very wise king who was noted for his wisdom. His fame spread wide and far.

A queen from another country heard of him and his wisdom. She paid a visit to him to find out if he was really as wise as people said.

She challenged him to solve a puzzle, posed by her. "One garland is original and the other one is artificial. Which is the real one?" she asked, holding up two garlands of flowers.

The two looked exactly the same. The courtiers were clueless about the right answer. The wise king remained silent as well.

The queen was very happy thinking she was defeating the King.

Finally the king gave a response. He did not answer the queen’s question but ordered the windows to be opened.

Bees flew in, buzzing. They hovered near the Queen and settled on the garland in her right hand.

The king declared with a smile that the garland in her right hand was the real one.

The queen accepted defeat and was truly impressed.
